

Konstantina Diroplaki has been an English teacher since 1996. She is currently working at the Organization of Teacher Training which is supervised by the Minister of Education and Religious Affairs. Before that, she worked as an English teacher in private language schools in Athens and state high schools in the provinces. She graduated from the University of Athens, Department of English Studies and also holds an MA in ELT from the University of Essex. She enjoys reading – especially crime novels – and travelling.